The Best Restaurants in Raleigh & Durham, North Carolina

Just 30 miles apart, Raleigh and Durham are often mentioned in the same breath. While each has its own distinct identity, both destinations seamlessly meld Southern hospitality and creative cooking, and their restaurants reflect a deep pride in North Carolina’s bountiful produce, agriculture and aquaculture.

Durham: The Durham

The Durham is best described as an American restaurant, but James Beard Award-winning chef Andrea Reusing’s influences skew more old American than new. She cites Mark Twain’s ode to American flavors — fresh butter, Maryland crabs, and ripe tomatoes from the garden — as inspiration, and so her seasonal menus reflect an abundance of ingredients from North Carolina farmers, fishermen and artisans. The restaurant, located in the lobby of The Durham Hotel, is open all day, transitioning from a light-filled daytime cafe tailored for a quick bite, coffee meetings or a working lunch to a glittering dinner spot, where you’ll find base signature dishes such as dry-aged, bone-in rib eye served with a roasted marrow bone or North Carolina baked oysters topped with Champagne sabayon and parmesan. There’s also a rooftop bar that boasts sweeping views of downtown Durham as well as offering a stellar raw bar and small plates menu.

Don’t miss the carrot dog, a ceramic-smoked carrot topped with green tomato chow-chow and sweet onion relish, which pairs well with the Spirit Hunter, a tequila, Aperol, jalapeno and grapefruit bitters toppe that tempers the carrot dog’s sweet-smoky flavors. If you find yourself in Chapel Hill, Reusing’s L’arte is a must-visit. Get the salt and pepper shrimp, which are fried till the shells are crispy as a potato chip — and just as addictive.

NEXT UP

The Best Restaurants in Charlotte, North Carolina

WE RECOMMEND

The Best Restaurants in Nashville

Best Chicago Restaurants from Triple D

Where to Eat in Austin: 27 Top Texas Restaurants

The Locals’ Guide to French Quarter Restaurants